

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A heat spreader, comprising a metal body with attached standoffs located approximately above the integrated circuit, is described. The standoffs should improve bond layer thickness control between the integrated circuit and the heat spreader, leading to a lower cost and lower mass package, as well as a more reliable device with increased thermal performance.